

I grew up on the family farm in Maryland. I have a BS degree in Horticulture from the University of Maryland and a doctorate in Plant Genetics from the University of Wisconsin. My wife Marilyn and I have two grown daughters. Most of my academic career has been at the University of Florida teaching and researching agriculture and environmental science. I retired in 2016.